Viking goalkeeper Olav Sogndal (Norway) is the first player to bring HyperMotion to a football pitch. HyperMotion Technology in FIFA 22 allows you to challenge all the rules of match physics, including collisions, kicking and ball control in your attempts to score. In FIFA 22, you'll be able to enjoy many new ways to become the great goalkeeper that you are. The first shot on target is now the 'confirm' shot for certain goalkeeper reactions. When you miss your first shot on goal, you will now have the option to pass your shot to your teammate, giving you more control. Smarter reactions will be possible when you are in possession of the ball. 'Bump' will continue to be a fundamental element of goalkeeper play. You can even see a 'bump' box move up to the ball with each pass. You will now also be able to move the position of the 'bump' a distance away from the player when you perform a bump on the opponent. To move the position of the 'bump' on a player who has the ball when you are in possession, you will also have the option to be able to move the bump just a little. This gives you the opportunity to bump the ball in a slightly different position. For the most part, 'Bump' means that you're standing up and using a striking technique to grab the ball and transfer it to the goalkeeper. But, if you bump with an opponent in a particular position, you can turn your bump into an attack. To improve 'Bump' you'll have much more control of how you position your body with 'Bump', giving you more time and space to strike. The goalkeeper AI is also better than ever. The new goalkeeper AI will improve your team's defending and goalkeeping as you pass them the ball back to the defender, score a goal or secure an assist. Goaltenders will also have the ability to build up their aggression when you're taking the ball away, even more than they could in FIFA 21. "With HyperMotion, we have the unique challenge of collecting data from athletes who play the game in perfect conditions but using the resources to mimic real-life situations," said Peter Riebling,

EA Canada developed the game on a new technology engine, allowing each player to move in realistic ways, with precise control on the ball, as well as more variation in the moves to create gameplay that was both more natural and exciting. EA Canada used an internal team composed of former players and soccer experts, to manage the development of the game in Los Angeles, California, the first two games were both released in 1989 by EA Canada on the Sega Master System and Game Gear consoles. EA Sports released the games in official licenses of many popular football leagues in the United States, Europe, Latin America and elsewhere. From 1989 to 2006, EA Canada also developed Madden NFL Football on console systems. The first professional licenses were for the Major League Soccer of the United States, established in 1993. The UEFA Europa League was developed in 1998, after many years of development and improvement.
