This gives the desired result. I can't seem to understand why we are dividing by $(x - x_0)^{n - 1}$, since this makes no sense to me. I assumed that the author meant that we were instead dividing each side by $x - x_0$, but then I'd have a problem because I'd have to divide the polynomial by $x - x_0$ on the left side, which doesn't make sense. A: The author is using a different variable, so that $(x-x_0)^{n-1}$ is a different variable from x which means the coefficient of x in the polynomial is 0. So if you divide by the new x variable you will get exactly that polynomial. Q: Tips on making a parry that doesn't harm the attacker I'm making a simple 3rd edition D&D style system, for me and a friend. We have a cleric, who has a ranged spell, (a crossbow) and I have a shield, and have some mid-to-high level melee combat classes. Now, I like the parry a lot, but I find that the average fighter/bard can immediately get a free attack, so it doesn't really help protect you. To get around this, I was thinking of having them all have a "parry" attack, in a way that acts like a shield bash or something 6d1f23a050
