With the invention of amazing 3D printers, it's now possible to print in pigments and other materials, and a 3D printer used to create a new line of wearable gadgets may just prove to be popular in the future. One such 3D printing enthusiast has created an amazing 3D printable wearable, and he's using it to display messages, social media updates, and the time of day. The wearable is called the Energize iPhone Wristband and can be used to display messages, Twitter updates, and the time of day. The bracelet is controlled through a user's iPhone, and it works by pulling information directly from the iPhone's various social media and time-related services, and it can all be done through the use of an app called SlickSlides. An interesting aspect of the Energize iPhone Wristband is its use of solar power. This ensures the bracelet doesn't require batteries, and it could potentially mean endless battery power. This could be extremely useful in the future when your iPhone's battery is running low. However, this is something that only works on sunny days, and once the sun goes down, all the information can't be seen or read. As mentioned, the Energize iPhone Wristband utilizes an app called SlickSlides to show all of the important information. This app allows the user to customize their device's screen to easily show all of the information at once. This kind of customization could allow someone to pull information from other social media platforms and websites and display it on a single, neat screen. The Energize iPhone Wristband will definitely get someone's attention, and is certainly one of the more unique creations to come out of 3D printing in a while. This would be extremely useful for someone who spends a lot of time outside in all kinds of weather conditions, and they could do all sorts of cool stuff with this bracelet. It's easy to see how someone could be jealous of this great creation, and you can actually try to do what it does on a regular iPhone 6d1f23a050
