if price reduction is the reason that game consoles are not selling as well as they used to be, it will take some of the pressure off them and they will be able to continue to push out more titles. but if console gamers want to get games this christmas, they have to be patient because prices are going down. here is a stylish women's headset called the beat that looks pretty similar to a google pixel buds and has a big speaker built into the earpiece. it has both a clip that can be worn over the ear and a clamshell design that fits into a pocket, but it is a slightly bulkier device. the new version of the software, currently called rio 3.0, will be split into two major categories:

an e-commerce store for creating and selling items; and a storefront where users can browse items. the software will remain free to download. even in the early days of the startup world, it is rare to find a retail company without some form of direct-to-consumer (dtd) e-commerce strategy. and much of that strategy hinges on acquiring the digital media, platforms, and technologies necessary to implement it. the online fashion marketplace is positive to development of 3d printing, as consumers can custom order any clothing items online. perhaps most notable, is the upcoming agreement between facebook and dior for a " vr h&m collection. once planned to be released in early 2019, the new collection is expected to be powered by ai and offer interactive 3d models of apparel, according to the retailer. eventually, the partnership should be able to create branded virtual reality (vr) content and generate in-store traffic. the launch is timed for the consumer electronics (ce) industry's annual ces trade show. facebook has invested $400 million in vr, and the deal with dior should put the tech giant in a strong position to claim a piece of a fast-growing market.
