once the battle is over, the winner is given a commendation rating. the higher the rating, the more bonus points you get. each commendation you earn will then appear on your stats screen, so you always know how well you've done at the end of every level. the shooting isn't too different to gears of war, the only difference is that at the end of each level you choose a specific operative to carry onto the next map. each operative has up to three stats and plenty of abilities, starting with three weapons to choose between. your selection will affect how the level plays out and the amount of firepower you're carrying, so make sure you get it right. there are also no reloading animations, so no second thoughts as you belatedly consider your aim. while the idea is to launch a rapid-fire assault with the right amount of ammo so you don't run out, there are two irritating things about that; the enemies have an unflinching ability to move and catch up with you if you do run out, and the game will reload the last magazine you had with you if it runs out - although it works in such a way that you only appear to run out once or twice. the initial levels are more about pinning enemy troops against a wall, drawing enemy fire as you continue to destroy the factory, and over a short period of time you achieve a steady level of accuracy and automatic reloads. the latter doesn't present any issues, although if you're relying on that to cope with the enemy's online awesomeness it might prove a bit too much. if your accuracy is slipping and you're in a rush to get the factory destroyed, you can also manually reload, but that's really a last resort.

all the difficulty seems to lie in keeping the enemy occupied and out of your team's way. after all, the whole business of the enemy chasing you around is that you have to deal with him. unlike in gears, the majority of the enemies just sort of wander around in the background, opening fire in a more random fashion than gears, who would hit you much more often if they really wanted to hit you. you won't be fired at every time you walk in view, but you'll be firing back at them anyway to make sure they don't get in the way. their weapons are pretty tricky, all requiring a certain amount of trigger control before an accurate shot will be fired, making them very different from gears' heavy, which is practically all about picking up a weapon and pointing it at anyone who isn't dead or wearing a suit of armour. by virtue of being so much more varied and accurate, the enemy soldiers are far less in need of protection, meaning that they can attack you much more readily than gears, but your shield will stop any incoming bullets that come close. the problem with the enemy is that it can often move in and out of the room without any regard to cover points, so anything you can hit with a few bullets often gets hit with a few more bullets, making it easy for the enemy to make use of the environment and cover points as cover themselves. these cover points aren't always obvious, so sneaking up behind can be tricky, with bullets tearing through whatever cover you may have managed to lay down; even using a sniper rifle might be difficult as the enemy still manages to fire at you when you try to put him down from a distance. 5ec8ef588b
