Molecular basis of zinc-mediated conformational control in various classes of bacterial proteins. Molecular docking of carbonyl cyanide m-chlorophenylhydrazone (CCCP) to zinc- and copper-containing proteins reveals that conformational control in these proteins is carried out through coordination of zinc with histidine at the catalytic site. The zinc-mediated control mechanism in these proteins is different in the presence of CCCP. In the metal-free proteins, zinc binds to a specific His residue at the active site and this His serves as a ligand for the incoming substrate. The presence of a metal ion makes the His residue to transform into a donor through chelating the incoming substrate; subsequently, zinc binds to the active-site His residue through another mechanism. The present study may provide the understanding of the evolution of various classes of bacterial proteins.

A Los Angeles Police Department officer drove his personal vehicle into the middle of a road at speeds of up to 90 mph, mortally wounding the man behind the wheel and hurting a passenger who was sitting in the backseat. Police said the man behind the wheel, David Nash, 40, was caught on camera driving at the officer and then pushed the officer's vehicle into the center of the street before driving onto the sidewalk. The officers were responding to a call about a shooting nearby. The suspect fled on foot, and both officers involved in the crash chased him down and shot him to death, said Lt. Andy Neiman. The identity of the third passenger in the vehicle was not immediately released.

Hepatic artery aneurysm with hypoproteinemia and transjugular intrahepatic portosystemic shunt. A patient with hepatic artery aneurysm associated with hypoproteinemia and transjugular intrahepatic portosystemic shunt (TIPS) was reported. Hepatic aneurysm is a relatively rare etiology of hypoproteinemia. Hypoproteinemia is often caused by increased capillary permeability resulting from disruption of blood-lymph barrier. A 69-year-old male patient presented with hypoproteinemia and
