Perhaps its a feature, perhaps its an issue, perhaps something else, or perhaps its a combination of all these things. Our IT has a small network consisting of 10 computers, some Windows 8, some Windows 7, and one Mac. We have a java jvm/jre for our app development. On the Mac that is used by our app developer (that we cannot connect to the network from, because we are unable to get the iptables settings correct), we have the java jvm installed. I believe it is the default java on OSX. We have two or three other Java applications installed, and those are both 7, the default java on OSX. From another device, I could connect to the other mac, and I was able to uninstall and reinstall both the jre and the jvm. I then ran the app and it worked fine. From a Windows 8 machine, I also tried to uninstall and reinstall the jvm and the jre. It didn't work. I didn't try the other applications, the mac apps and jvm, I didn't try the jre and jvm on a Windows 7 machine. So, my question is, if a user is unable to download the app, and they are attempting to remove the java jvm, will it simply get overwritten with the default java, which is installed on OSX, and not the java that the app needs to run properly? EDIT: Here is a screen shot of my try to uninstall the Java: A: Downloaded that file, and it ran perfectly. I have no idea what the issue was. This is the only issue I have seen with this app. The app was not listed in the Microsoft Store under Programs and Features, and I have not received a mail from Microsoft about it. Review Clean up internet browsing history

The first time I decided to use Internet Explorer's clean browsing history, I was shocked with what I had to clean up. I was surfing the Internet for a very long time and at some point, I remembered that I had typed something in the search box of the website www.facebook.com. I tried to find it, but it was not there! I was too late and had already typed in my username and password. I was angry with myself, but then I thought that I could use Internet Explorer's clean browsing history to get back all those sites. Here is how you can use this feature and clean up your browsing history:

Step 1. Open Internet Explorer and in the address bar type in the website www.facebook.com.

Step 2. You will see an option that says "I'm using a clean browsing history" and an option called "Cookie settings".

Under the clean browsing history, select "Clean History". In the cookie settings, select "Keep me logged in". This will make your Internet Explorer stay logged in while browsing the internet
