Dodgy User Comments Full Item Description Rapidshare Queuer is a very intuitive application designed to help you download multiple files from Rapidshare at the same time, while also providing some other options to enhance the whole process. All features are grouped in the same window and this is the element that makes everything a breeze even for the very beginners. Although some of you might find this pretty difficult, Rapidshare Queuer requires users to manually add all download links to a dedicated list to allow the application automatically start the downloads. On the other hand, the application also comprises clipboard monitoring, so it's enough to copy a download link to clipboard because Rapidshare Queuer should take care of the rest of the job. Last but not least, the program boasts a simple option to shut down the system when all downloads are completed, which is pretty useful if you wish to download some large files during the night. On the other hand, Rapidshare Queuer doesn't seem too stable on Windows 7 machines and crashes every once in a while after new downloads are started. The good thing however is that it runs smoothly on older workstations, with a minimum impact on system performance. All things considered, Rapidshare Queuer is an interesting project, but some glitches still need to be fixed. Plus, it clearly needs more features, as well as customization options and a more appealing interface to target not only beginners, but also those with a bit more computer experience. Basically, it's more than just a standard download manager, but it's an application that aims to make the whole process really simple, especially when dealing with multiple links. Once the main window is opened, users can access all the options available. For example, when downloading files, all you need to do is to add one or multiple links to the program. After that, the links will be stored in a dedicated list so you can easily navigate through them and perform your downloads. To add a link, simply drag it to the list and then drop it on a custom position. Once you've done this, the system will go to work automatically by adding the files to the list and then downloading them. However, you can also add each download manually by simply clicking on the Download link button to start a new download. Furthermore, when a download is completed, the program will automatically terminate itself, once all files have been downloaded. On top of that, a button is also available to simply copy the download links to the clipboard, so they can be pasted elsewhere. Finally, the option to shut down the system is also available, so you can simply close all downloads and put the computer to sleep when you're finished. Once all files have been downloaded, Rapidshare Queuer will only stop the system if all links have been added to the list.
