I have been using Multidimensional arrays to store images in my app. I used to work with old android versions and their deprecated array of objects, which I also used. I have now moved to the new way of doing it, an array of arrays, which is a much more flexible way to manage the storage, as I could make sure that I was storing as many images as were available. However now I have a problem. In the code I currently have, the first array (which is the main array) is generated at run time, and I can't use it to initialise the second array to store the images. Therefore I have to pass the array size to the function which creates it, which makes it clumsy and I want to simplify it. The code currently looks like this: public void onCreate(Bundle savedInstanceState) { super.onCreate(savedInstanceState); setContentView(R.layout.main); ViewPager myPager = (ViewPager) findViewById(R.id.viewpager); ImagePagerAdapter adapter = new ImagePagerAdapter(this); myPager.setAdapter(adapter); Bitmap[] bmp = new Bitmap[46]; Bitmap[] bmp2 = new Bitmap[0]; Bitmap[] bmp3 = new Bitmap
